Three big-price, Each Way picks for this season's UEFA club cup competitions...

An exclusive Across the Leagues report

In this report we're targeting the three 2023/24 UEFA club cup competitions: the Champions League, Europa League, and Europa Conference League.

The group stages take place from September to December. With the knockout rounds from February through to the finals in May and June...

Here at Across the Leagues, we were just a penalty shootout away from a 51/1 payout from last season's 419/1 UEFA cups mega-acca. With Manchester City finally fulfilling their Champions League dream to land one leg for us at 5/2. Only for Jose Mourinho's 14/1 Roma to be beaten on penalties in the Europa League final...

For this season's tilt at the three UEFA cup competitions. We're going in again at the massive prices...

English Premier League clubs accounted for two of the three European titles in 2022/23. With Man City taking the Champions League. And West Ham tasting some long-awaited glory, in the second-ever running of the Europa Conference League.

Sevilla won the Europa League last term, making it the seventh time in 10 years that a Spanish side has lifted that trophy – and five of those were Sevilla. That latest victory means Sevilla have graduated to the Champions League this time, where they are 100/1+ outsiders.

Another standout Spanish stat comes from one of the long-established kings of European football, Real Madrid...

Real Madrid - Champions League, Last 8 Years:

2022/23 – Semi Final

2021/22 – Final: Won

2020/21 – Semi Final

2019/20 – Last 16

2018/19 – Last 16

2017/18 – Final: Won

2016/17 – Final: Won

2015/16 – Final: Won

Real Madrid are the only team to have ever successfully defended the Champions League trophy. Man City will be looking to rewrite history in that department. City are 2/1 in general to do so. One of a trio of English favourites in the 2023/24 ante-post betting...

Man City are 2/1 for the Champions League. Liverpool are 3/1 for the Europa. Aston Villa are 4/1 for the Conference. That UEFA Outright combo – the three favourites – tots up to 59/1. A price which may well have legs through to Easter and beyond. But we're after much bigger prices here...

Away from English excitement and/ or any potential for Premier League 'bias.' Three teams from other countries catch the eye at greater individual prices...

Three to follow in Europe...

In the Champions League, all-time silverware leaders Real Madrid at 7/1 just can't be ignored. I'd trust Carlo Ancelotti's Madrid more than Thomas Tuchel's 5/1 Bayern Munich right now – and the Spaniards are available at the bigger price. Real continue to do good marquee business in the transfer market, looking to replace old with new - eg. 20-year-old world superstar in the making Jude Bellingham, as the likes of 38-year-old Luka Modric finally start to wind down. I refer you again to that Real Madrid Champions League list above: four wins, and two further semi finals, from their last eight sittings at European club football's top table.

One German side who may be underrated in the betting, however, are Bayer Leverkusen. Priced at 14/1 and 12/1 to go one better in the Europa League this season, having reached the semi finals in 2022/23. I like what I'm seeing from Leverkusen in the Bundesliga, where they are the early league leaders this season. Again, some decent transfer activity looks to have set this club up to build on recent progress. Including 22-year-old Victor Boniface up front. As well as bringing in the highly-rated Nathan Tella from Southampton, and the experienced Granit Xhaka from Arsenal. With a promising young manager in Xabi Alonso – a big European trophy winner himself as a player – Leverkusen are on the up.

Last but not least, in the Europa Conference League, French side Lille could prove one to watch at 14/1 and 12/1. They got here courtesy of a 5th-place finish in Ligue 1 last term. With their star man very much being 23-year-old Canadian forward, Jonathan David. He banged in 24 league goals in 2022/23, and has started the new campaign in the goals once again. Lille managed to hang on to David during the summer transfer window, despite much speculation and attention. His goals and presence can help give this club a sought-after trophy run – much like winners Roma and West Ham in the previous two instalments of this competition. Lille manager Paulo Fonseca has been edging towards Euro success; in his time as Roma boss, he guided them to the Europa League semis. Before that, at Shakhtar Donetsk, Fonseca was at the helm when the underdogs pulled off a shock Champions League group-stage victory at Man City.

Our bets are Real Madrid, Bayer Leverkusen, and Lille. The three individual prices warrant Each Way support as singles (1/2 odds 1-2 places). The advice there being a standard 1-pt Each Way bet on each.

And if we approach them as a multiple, then the odds become truly astronomical... small stakes is the play here, of course. 0.25 pt on the Each Way Treble being the call (0.5 total stake). With around 1,500/1 for the full house...
